Houston Luxury Interior Designer Named Leader in Design

HOUSTON—On April 17, Newberry Architects Principal Gina Brown received a prestigious Leader in Design award from the Houston Design Center (HDC). HDC, Houston’s premier design center for residential and contract furnishings, awards the designation which is given only to the city’s most talented and accomplished architects and interior designers. HDC selected Brown as a Leader in Design for her work that not only brings out the beauty of architecture, but also focuses on the functionality that makes Newberry a top choice for families seeking to remodel their existing home or build new.

Brown joined Newberry Architects in 2006, since completing more than 100 design projects that have been featured in publications such as Segreto Vignettes, Luxe Magazine and Architectural Digest. Newberry, a luxury architecture firm, works with clients in the Houston and across the U.S.

“Gina added a new perspective to the firm when she joined us,” said Ken Newberry, founder of Newberry Architecture. “Her ability to give every detail of a home the attention it deserves is part of what makes Newberry’s designs special to our clients.”

Brown is also known for her team-driven solutions blending all aspects of design, including interiors, architecture and landscape. This skill has given her a reputation—rare among architects—for providing a seamless, enjoyable, design-build process for clients.

“Every design decision counts,” Brown said. “All aspects of architecture are intentional, and it’s part of my job to guide our clients through hundreds of decisions during the design process. I want every client to walk into their newly finished house and know that it already feels like home.”

HDC’s Leader in Design award recipients are chosen by a peer group consisting of the most sought-after designers in Texas.

“Our partners at the Houston Design Center understand that our firm roots itself in highly detailed and intentional architecture; they help us pull together those details,” Brown said. “The Houston Design Center’s showrooms offer us an incredible array of choices and partnerships that give our designs the touches that make them sing.”

Brown balances a passion for her work with her family of five. She also serves as the co-founder and president of the Marshall Brown Foundation, a nonprofit providing assistance to families suffering the loss of a child, and she continues to be an advocate for success in foster care and adoption.

About Newberry Architects

Newberry Architecture is a full-service architecture firm established in 1997 by Founder and Senior Principal Ken Newberry. The firm is founded on Ken's desire to create architecture that simultaneously embodies clients' personal style and enhances their day-to-day experiences. As a result, the firm established and continues to maintain close working relationships with its clients. Initially working in two small rooms out of Ken's home, the original staff shared desk space, phones, and other equipment, so pressed for space that the bathroom doubled as the print room. Even with the spatial challenges, they remained focused on their projects and the needs of their clients and eventually grew into a new space that could support their expanding team. Newberry's leadership continues to foster close collaboration across the many phases involved in the design, documentation, and construction process while defining their relationships with clients, contractors, and consultants.
